statement (See below). It would be seen, therefrom, that the overall level of naxalite violence has remained more or less at the same level, during this period, although the level of violence in different States has fluctuated. Uttar Pradesh has remained marginally affected, with less than 1% of the incidents and casualties in each of thes years. In 2006 and 2007, violence was largely concentrated in Chhattisgarh and Jharkhand, which together accounted for around 68% of the incidents in each of these two years.

(c) to (e) 'Police' and 'public order' being State subjects, the responsibility for maintenance of law and order, including dealing with naxalite activities, lies primarily in the domain of the concerned State Governments. However, the situation has been continuously and closely reviewed and assessed by the Central Government through detailed consultations with the State Governments, and necessary steps, as required, are taken on a continuous basis, including focused attention and action in respect of the most affected areas. The Central Government is also supplementing the efforts and resources of the State Governments in various ways. These include deployment of Central Paramilitary forces to assist the State Police, sanctioning of India Reserve battalions to augment the strength and capabilities of the State Police, modernization and upgradation of the State Police and Intelligence agencies through the Scheme for Modernization of State Police Forces, re-imbursement of security-related expenditure, assistance in training of State Police, sharing of Intelligence, facilitating inter-State coordination and assistance in development works through a wide range of schemes of different Ministries.
